In Sunny Italy.

CORINTH, August 17, 1901.

Dear Friends—I will begin a letter from this place, as I have more leisure than I am likely to have when I rejoin the party. We left Athens early yesterday morning to retrace our way to Patras, Corfu, Brindise and thence to Naples. I stopped here yesterday and let the party take the trip to Mycenae, Tiryns and Nauplia without me. They arrive at 12:40 and leave at 2:10 for Patras where we dine and take ship for Brindise via Corfu. I sit in an airy salon and glancing up see the marvelously colored sea as it enters the strait. A light house is on the head land at the right, which last night flashed out a light about ever ten seconds. 3 1/2 miles to the left, northwest is Acro-Corinth, a lofty citadel of world wide fame. I should like to climb it for the view, which is said to be unsurpassed. But it involves too much labor. The sun set here last night was of wonderful beauty. There were many clouds and the rows of hills in tiers behind each other had each its own lovely light. I hope it was as fine in Nauplia where the others were. I walked to the end of the street yesterday at four. The water comes in with more force there than just in front of the hotel which is near the strait. Going along I saw several flocks of goats being driven from door to door. They are sure of fresh milk here. In Naples the goats enter the house and often go up several flights of stairs. Here as in Athens I saw men seated and smoking tobacco through a long rubber or some kind of flexible tube inserted in a large water bottle. This morning I walked on the beach and saw a woman gathering sticks, drift wood, of which by the way there is very little. I looked inquiring and asked if there were "concha." She said "I am English" at which I rejoiced for no one here speaks anything I can understand. She said there were no shells except very rarely when a strong west wind has blown. She is fifty, does not look more than thirty-five, has almost forgotten her English. She came with a lady from England 28 years ago and married a Corfu man who plays the violin. She lives by the water in a bit of a cottage. She says it is healthy here. This hotel is the cleanest place I have been in many a day. The floors are bare and of wood. There are no curtains up. All the paint and plaster has just been renewed. Water is served in porous stone or clay bottles which are set on plates to catch the drips. It really is cool from evaporation. Last night I ate alone in the gravelled court, at 8 o'clock. The landlady and landlond with kindly faces and ways hovered just beyond the light of my two candles. These candles were sunk in straight nice looking brass sticks with an oval glass globe about 3 1/2 inches on each. When the candle burned too low some mechanism shot it up a half inch. This morning I was again served alone in an airy dining room. The guests of the hotel, I note by the register, come mostly in winter and spring. Yesterday afternoon a carriage load of people called; a gentleman and lady and maid and three girls who looked as if they might be triplets twelve or fourteen years old. The lady and daughters were brought up to my balcony to see the view. The lady said in English "very nice" and with many a smile and bow departed. "Very nice" seems to be the stock phrase of non-English speaking people. The carts here are painted in a fancy style not noted elsewhere. Vegetables, figs and grapes I have seen sold by vendors carrying scales and walking behind basket laden donkeys. Albanian costumes are in far greater operation here than in Athens. My opera glasses enable me to see street scenes with clearness. Some pretty, well-dressed girls pass. The Greeks are more like Americans, we all think, than are French or Italians. It seems queer not to know ones letters. When I tried my glasses at the opticians in Athens a book of six languages was handed me of which I knew the characters of but one, and that, French, I could not read. I really would like to stop here some days, as it is so quiet and restful. This is not the Corinth Paul knew, but he must have seen these waters and Acro-Corinth. Old Corinth has been destroyed by terrible earthquakes, I think. C. has the Baedeker and I can't be sure.

On the Bulgaria. Anchored at Corfu 11:30 A. M. We have just breakfasted, having had coffee and toast earlier. A little after twelve almost all are going ashore to a bathing place to try a bath in the Mediterranean. It is very comfortable here so I think I'll stick by the ship. We saw a bit of a rainbow early this morning—7:30! We had a good night, smooth sea and good breeze which gave us plenty of fresh air. We had a very pleasant railroad ride yesterday afternoon. Showers were threatened, and the panorama of cloud, sea, cliffs, vineyards, and olive groves was charming beyond description. It was interesting to note the progress in the current fields since we were here ten days ago. In many cases they seemed to be almost through. There were many bare drying places. In others great heaps were ready for boxing. A good many lots were covered with sheeting, or crates were carefully stacked and covered with a roof to prevent injury in case of rain. I saw old women gleaning the scattering berries still clinging to the stems. The sunset was unique. There were fiery trails like fire on mountains, over an expanse of cloud and the colors thrown on hills were lovely beyond description. The difference in the natural color of the soil is striking. Some times a bare sandy almost sandstone hill of white is capped by a red sand. Some cliffs are dark and some great gorges are green with vine. But no matter how bare or forbidding the soil or cliff, the atmosphere which envelops them so idealizes and changes all, that the scene is sure to be of wondrous beauty. It is a marvel what keeps the vines if green. All the streams, we crossed yesterday, but one were dried up. Great expanses of gravel where the bridges cross show what the rainy season does. In this respect those who have been there are reminded of California. There is some irrigation but I do not make out that it is general in the vineyards. The white grapes we have to eat are delicious. The peaches as a rule are inferior to ours. Some years are fairly good. Melons are very fine. The rinds are very thin. Last Wednesday the 14th was a full day. We spent an hour looking over the Erechtheion. The Portico of the Maidens is particularly fine. The richly decorated capitals of the East Portico columns quite surprised me. We spent three hours in the Acropolis Museum which is better arranged for chronological study than some. There is much of interest here but not so much that is beautiful. There are some models which show what the work must have been. Only fragments remain, and it is a great delight to some people to reconstruct a statue, frieze or vase from bits which to the uninitiated seem almost meaningless. In the afternoon we walked to the station and just missed a train to the Piraeus. We employed the twenty-five minutes in swarming through the old Bazaar hard by. The wares were very interesting. Leather belts and bags perforated in fancy shapes, Albanian costumes, turned up slippers with pompons on the toes, strings of beads which men carry and finger to enable them to concentrate their thoughts or relieve their embarrassment as some men finger the buttons of their coats, etc. We crossed the town of Piraeus and got on an ordinary freight steamer to sail through the straits and bay of Salamis to Eleusis. We tried to imagine the chagrin of Xerxes as he sat on his throne and watched the discomfort of troops in that great battle, but to tell the truth I was more interested in the life around me. There were many Albanians on the boat. One middle aged couple had two frolicsome babies of whom they were evidently proud. Two tall handsome young men ate their lunch with many a jest. They had a great, round flat loaf of bread, some olives (black and wrinkled not green like ours) some cheese and a beautiful thin rinded water melon. A woman with an embroidered coat (but I'm sorry to say a hole in the shoulder) was the picture of rural health and contentment. She joined her husband and several other men in eating a melon which the man cut with a huge knife. I wondered where in his skirts he found a place for it. A young woman greatly admired my fan (a red and yellow Oberlin anniversary one) and I'm afraid asked me for it, but I don't understand these languages. Many of our crowd saw a ten foot shark just at the bow of the boat. The boat floated low in the water so they had a good view. C. and I missed it. The boat landed at Eleusis late so there was little time to see the ruins. But we stepped on the "Sacred way" and gave a thought to the Eleusinian mysteries of which Cicero has recorded that "they taught not only to live happily but to die with a fairer hope."

I'm having time enough to write to-day, but the twitter of Greek all about doesn't help me concentrate my thoughts. E. F. MAY.

E. R. Munday, a lawyer of Henrietta, Tex., once fooled a grave-digger. He says: "My brother was very low with malarial fever and jaundice. I persuaded him to try Electric Bitters, and he was soon much better, but continued their use until he was wholly cured. I am sure Electric Bitters saved his life." This remedy expels malaria, kills disease germs and purifies the blood; aids digestion, regulates liver, kidneys and bowels, cures constipation, dyspepsia, nervous diseases, kidney troubles, female complaints; gives perfect health. Only 50c at Arcadia Valley Drug Co.
